The first thing International Study Centre student, Ken noticed about Britain was the polite nature of people here.

The second was how attractive the 160-acre campus is at the School.

The student from Hong Kong joined as an IGCSE student to learn English in the ISC with a view to joining the main school Sixth Form. He freely admits to having had too many distractions in Hong Kong, which adversely affected his education.

“Before I came here my study wasn’t going well but that’s now reversed completely. Teachers here are prepared to help students to understand their subjects and put in the time to ensure we get the best benefits. It helps that class sizes are small, which enables them to give us more time. I think that’s the reason why I have been able to learn to speak English so quickly during my time at Rossall.

This is a nice place to study, with lots of open space and things to do. There are also many nationalities on campus, which makes it good to learn about other cultures; therefore it’s a perfect location for me.”

Having mastered the language in a relatively short time, Ken hopes to stay on to take the IB Diploma before going on to university in England.

“My father says that to succeed in business I must learn the English language, yet here, I am also learning about different cultures and my own abilities, which means I shall take away much more from my time at Rossall than language alone.”
